This heading covers a number of domestic appliances in which an electric motor is incorporated. The term " domestic appliances " in this heading means appliances normally used in the household. These appliances are identifiable, according to type, by one or more characteristic features such as overall dimensions, design, capacity, volume. The yardstick for judging these characteristics is that the appliances in question must not operate at a level in excess-of household requirements.

Subject to the exclusions and in appropriate cases the limitations of weight given in Chapter Note 3, the heading covers apparatus which fulfil the above criteria. The heading does not cover appliances driven by a separate electric motor (whether by means of a flexible shaft, transmission belts or other transmission equipment), nor appliances which, though similar in construction and use, are clearly intended solely for industrial use (e.g., in the food industries, in chimney sweeping, machine cleaning or road cleaning); these are classified, in general, in heading 82.10 or in Chapter 84.

The appliances of this heading are of two groups (see Chapter Note 3):

(A) A limited class of articles are classified here irrespective of their weight.

This group consists of the following only :

(3) Fruit or vegetable juice extractors.

EQUIPMENT PRESENTED WITH THE APPLIANCES OF THIS HEADING

Many of the appliances listed above may be presented with interchangeable parts or auxiliary devices to make them suitable for various purposes. For example, food mixers which can be used for cutting, grinding, whipping, mincing, etc.; slicers with honing and sharpening devices; floor scrubbers with a polishing brush set; scrubbers with a soap feeder and suction device for removing dirty water or soap suds. Such an appliance is classified here together with the parts and accessories presented with it, provided they are of a kind and number commonly used with the appliance. The weight of the extra interchangeable parts or detachable auxiliary devices is to be ignored in determining whether the appliance falls in the heading under the terms of paragraph (B) above.
